

Will MAHA turn on Trump? How his executive order feels like 'betrayal'

With one signature, President Donald Trump ignited an uproar in the Make America Healthy Again movement, which has been a key constituency.

On Feb. 18, Trump issued an executive order, saying that for the sake of national defense, he was increasing domestic supplies of glyphosate, a chemical used in agricultural herbicides such as the weedkiller Roundup.

Glyphosate-based herbicides play a critical role in maintaining the United States' "agricultural advantage by enabling farmers to efficiently and cost-effectively produce food and livestock feed," according to the order.
